

Singapore-based health tech startup Naluri raises $5 M for SEA expansion

12 August 2025 | News

Funds will be used for working capital to reach profitability within a year, and further expansion into Asian markets, starting with the Philippines and Vietnam image not found or type unknown

Naluri, Southeast Asia's (SEA) leading digital employee health and wellbeing provider, has announced the successful completion of a $5 million Series-B equity fundraising round.

This latest round was led by TELUS Global Ventures - through the Pollinator Fund for Good - the strategic impact investment arm of world-leading communications technology company, TELUS, alongside existing investors Sumitomo Corporation Equity Asia, M Venture Partners, and others.

This new injection of capital caps a total of $14 million Series B funds raised including earlier tranches. The funds will be used for working capital to reach profitability within a year, and further expansion into Asian markets, starting with the Philippines and Vietnam.

Naluri has established a clear leadership position in the employee wellbeing markets in Indonesia and Malaysia, serving enterprise clients in banking and insurance, energy and mining, telecommunications and technology, transport and logistics, professional services and BPO industries. It expanded its presence to Singapore and Thailand and secured a number of Pan-Asian and global clients with its unique programmes that combine mental health, preventive behavioural health and chronic disease management, with health screenings and assessments, health promotion and engagement programmes, multidisciplinary health coaching and consultation services, and 24/7 crisis support lines.

Concurrent to this investment, TELUS Health has signed a commercial partnership agreement with Naluri to serve their Employee Assistance Programme clients across eight markets in the region. This strategic investment marks a deepening of TELUS' commitment to advancing digital health innovation globally through both commercial scale and impact-driven capital. The investment from TELUS Global Ventures, through the Pollinator Fund for Good, demonstrates commercial success and measurable impact can go hand in hand.